

Discussion Guide: Neichelle Guidry

What It Means to Be Human

Reflect

- At the beginning of her talk, Neichelle relates a question her therapist once posed to her: “Who ever told you you had to be perfect?” What messages have you received from your family, upbringing, or culture about making mistakes and failure? In what areas of your life do you feel the pressure to be perfect?
- Describe a time when you have gone beyond your own physical, emotional, and mental limits. What boundaries could you have set to help prevent this? Why are boundaries often hard to set for ourselves?
- Describe a recent circumstance in which you had to ask for help. To what extent do you think asking for help can be a sign of maturity and strength?

Respond

- Quoting Tricia Hersey from the Nap Ministry, Neichelle describes rest as a form of resistance. What do you think it means for rest to be a form of resistance? When you rest, what are you resisting?
- Neichelle observes that we sometimes struggle to extend to ourselves the same grace that we extend to others. Is this true for you? What biblical truths do you need to remind yourself of when you struggle to be gracious with yourself?
